is the Senate. A subcommittee headed by Judge Frouty, however, changed it yesterday, making it conform to Judge Frouty's ideas. The bill provides:
"The assessments herein provide for shall be levied and paid for in the following manner, namely: Where the width of the roadway actually to be paved is forty feet or less between the curbs or between the guitters, where no curbs exist, after deducting the amount required to be paid by the street railway companies, the total cost of the work, including the expense of assessments, shall be assessed against the shutting property owners, one-half to each side; where the width of a street thus to be paved after, deducting the amount, required to be paved by the street railway companies shall exceed forty feet, the cost of construction as herein provided for shall be levied and paid for as foilows: The cost of construction of twenty feet on each side of said street whall be assessed against the abutting property owner, and the cost of paving the remaining protion of said street, including the cost of intersections, shall be paid for by the government of the District
